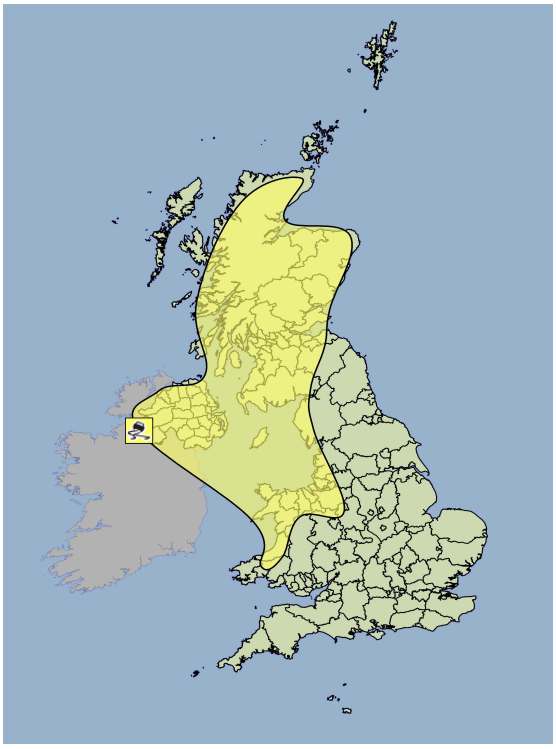
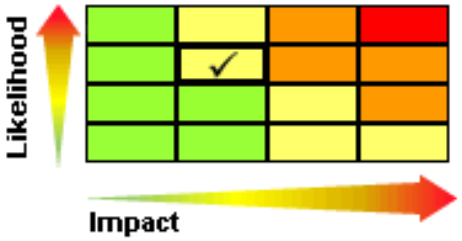
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A standard showery northwesterly airstream, followed by a fairly widespread frost away from windward coasts, means an ice risk to start the day on Wednesday. In most areas the breeze should lead to drying out of surfaces, but late showers, or water seeping from fields, increases the likelihood of local problems.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Wed, 13th Jan 2016 until 10:00 on Wed, 13th Jan 2016

Showers will continue for some time yet, then more widely clearing skies will allow untreated surfaces to fall below freezing, with the likelihood that some icy stretches will form, away from exposed coasts.

Please be aware of locally hazardous conditions.
